DEMOCRATS who did not support the "cuckoo" resolution may as well steer clear of the white house. "Cuckoos only, are welcomed there. No others need apply.

Mr. Tucker's Pen and His Party at Home. Congressman Tucker, of Virginia, spent some of his good money to buy a gold pen for the Wice-President, the speaker of the house and the President to use in signing the bill repealing the federal election law; and now Mr. Tucker is the proud possessor of that pen.

A week ago the Richmond Times, a Democratic newspaper, reviewed the election in Henrico county, Virginia, in November, 1893, and remarked that "what took place at Smither's store precinct should make every citizen of Virginia pause and ask himself earnestly and seriously if he has any voice in is government at all has matters now

What was it that took place at Smither's store precinct? According to this Democratic authority 350 votes were cast, yet 611 were recorded by the election officer, "and that by the most open and barefaced methods of stuffing the ballot box." If the people of Virginia care anything for the honesty of their elections this may well set them to thinking. It was a great triumph for somebody.

"By this method," says the Times "a precinct which had never before given more than 177 Democratic votes in an honest election was made to give 498 Democratic votes. It could just as easily have been made to give 1,000 if they had been needed." There is Demo cratic talent in Henrico county, but that county has no monopoly of the talent which gives as big a Democratic vote as may be needed, for the Times says that if it had the power to compel the attendance of witnesses "it has not the slightest doubt that it could show that a state of affairs similar to that at Smither's exists in almost every, if not every, negro county in the state."

As this allegation is made by a Demo cratic newspaper against its own party it will not be denounced as "waving the bloody shirt," "reviving the passions of the war," an argument for a "force bill," or anything of that threadbare sort. This indignant Democratic newspaper not only exposes the facts and denounces the corrupting of the ballot box, but says it is done under a state law "intended to be a shelter for cheating in This law "has demoralized a elections." great part of the moral sense of the people, and they look on at the frauds that are perpetrated in elections with a shrug of the shoulder and inward thanks that their election troubles are ended."

The Times is not sure the election troubles in Virginia are ended, and probably when Mr. Tucker goes home to exhibit in triumph his historic pen the Times will still be unable to draw any reassuring comfort from the situation. This honest and indignant Demoeratic newspaper asks: "Is it any relief to escape negro rule to fall under the absolute and autocratic rule of a ring of election thieves and ballot-box stuffers? What is the use of any citizen voting again? His vote is not counted unless it suits the election officers to count it. What part then has the citizen in his government? None, ab-He had just as well solutely none. stay at home as to go to the polls. The result is the same in either case."

If Mr. Tucker will use his new gold pen, consecrated by the sacred touch of Mr. Cleveland, to get in some honest work in behalf of the purity of elections in Virginia, he may do his state some service. He might begin by figuring out how his party could poll 498 votes where only 350 were east,

ONE of the bidders for the garbage contract did a significant thing as soon as he got the impression that the contract is no longer to be a mere formality. He advised the committee in subslance that if the contract is to be enforced he wants $2,000 more. So long

The Old Kearsarge Gone.

Almost thirty years have passed since loyal hearts were thrilled by the news that came over the sea telling that the gallant Winslow in the Kearsarge had met Semmes and his commerce-destroying Alabama off Cherbourg, on the French coast, and the Alabama had gone to the bottom. This generation can scarcely appreciate what the sinking of the Alabama meant to the Union cause. Seminos was capable and daring. His business was to harry our commerce, to strike and be off, and to repeat this performance as often as possible. He had no thought of fighting the Kearsacge. His alm was to escape from the trap in which Winslow had caught him, but his effort to get away gave Winslow the chance he sought, and that was the end of the Alabama.

One modern man of war could whip a dozen Kearsarges, but her gallant record invested her with a sentimental interest, and there is not a man in the navy who will not be grieved to know that today the noble old ship lies a wreck on the reef of Ronandor.

If some other community take another view of it, let that community have the "attraction."

West Virginia prohibits prize fights and punishes severely when the law is broken and the offenders caught. The kind of thing proposed by Corbett and Jackson is a prize fight in fact. Whether it can be shown to be so technically and prevented, is another question.

The Intelligences very carnestly hopes that Wheeling and West Virginia may not have to go through such an experience as Jacksonville and Florida have just had. From the point of view of the public morals and the public peace the thing is bad without qualification.

The gossips are marrying off all the prominent widowers to all the rich widows. Brains and money are a good combination, but they should be con sulted before combining.

Have We Some Poets?

What a theme for the poets in the wreck of the old Kearsarge. How it calls up memories of the great past. How it appeals to the national pride. The gale-the reef-the gallant old ship straining-her timbers parting-he hold filling-she careens-a shiver-a mighty plunge-a mad swirl of rushing waters, and naught is left of the old Kearsurge but the splendid record of her mighty deeds. The poets will think of more than this, of course, and something very much better, but here is a suggestion that may help them:

The Gallic mind is quick to suspect that something is wrong. It is disheartening. The bear is not so dull as he looks.

Commenting on the passage of the bill repealing the federal election law the INTELLIGENCER inadvertently conveyed the impression that the originated in the senate. It was a house bill, which after passing the senate awaited only the signature of the President to make it a law, and this it has now received.

The Register ought to stop the enterprise before it gets any further, for every time they make a foot of tin plate in this country it proves the wisdom of the McKinloy bill.
